

I read each of these books once a year. Although, these are not images of my physical self, they do represent me in the sense of values I hold dear. The gallantry of Don Quixote and the realistic dilemmas of Holden captivate my mind. To an extent I can relate my own life between these two tales. After all we are all guilty of chasing an impossible dream. (Emiliano Aguilar)

My self-portrait shows me surrounded by objects that have strong meaning in my life. All of the objects have shaped me into the person that I am today. Ranging from love to education, I couldn't see myself without anything in this picture. (Jesse Caldwell)

In the literal sense. I enjoy mountain biking and nature. It represents my ambition and desire for challenge. The biker's position represents where I am in life. I am about to take on an enjoyable challenge (college) and I don't know what my path will be for certain, but I will embrace it. (Ben Finley)

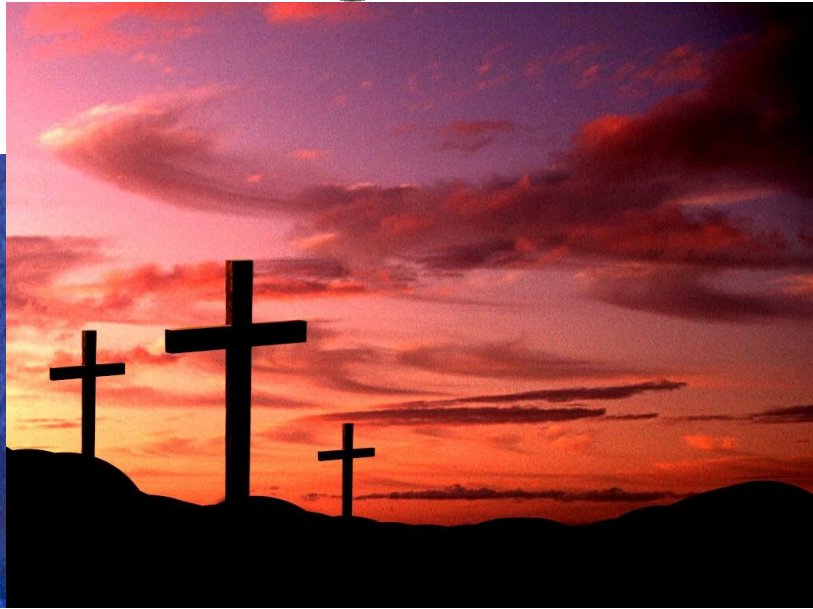

CAPTION: I had to draw a self-portrait for my drawing class, so I thought I would take advantage of that development and kill two birds with one stone. It's a pretty traditional and straight forward self portrait, which fits my personality because I'm a pretty traditional kind of guy. (Will Folsom)

This is a picture of me just before one of my high school football games pasted on to the head of the Heisman trophy. The Heisman trophy is the most coveted award in all of college football, however Division 3 football players are not eligible to win it.

Even though I said I would distort my self-portrait, I decided to keep this one normal because it captures all of the things I value in life; hard work, dedication, teamwork and fun. (Steven Magura)

The four things that have shaped my life thus far. These photos say more about who I am than a picture of myself could. (Drew Miles)

Who you are isn't necessarily how you look or what you are forced to do day-to-day; it is a combination of the things you love and the objects which lead you places. Baseball has lead me many places in life. (Andrew Rodgers)

This is Angie and I in My room back home in Indianapolis. I go back down every weekend to see her and go to work at America's Incredible Pizza Company. She and I get into trouble frequently and go practically anywhere we can while I'm home for amusement.

These photo shows me in action doing what I love the most. I was born an athlete and put my heart into becoming the best I can be everyday. Being back at Wabash allows be to continue my journey in being a Student Athlete. (Charles Smothers)

My self portrait is a photograph of myself as my alter ego, Freddy Franchise. This relates to my music which is a big part of me and is the reason for this self portrait. Also, you can vaguely see the mic in my studio behind me. (Cam Stewart)

This is me at a New Years Eve party. I feel it captures my fun-loving nature and outgoingness. (Patrick Wright)

Any Given Friday. (Andrew Weyler)

Brief explanation: this photo was taken in my high school with two of my friends on the day of high school graduation. I intentionally replaced my two friends' faces with smile icons, and I converted the whole photo into a mosaic picture made of icons of my high school classmates' facebook profile picture. (Paul Yan)
